Buddhist AIDS Project

"What is going on now is very important" - Thich Nhat Hahn

by Steve Peskind

The Buddhist AIDS Project - BAP - is a big name for a small group responding to practical and spiritual needs of this time. BAP was born in the Fall of 1993, as an outreach effort of the Gay Buddhist Fellowship. With increased diversity of volunteers, BAP organizationally separated from GBF in the Spring of 1994. The project today includes a working committee of eight who administer BAP and monitor client services; thirty Buddhist-sensitive volunteers who provide assistance - from meditation instruction to body work; and twenty people living with HIV who receive and offer skilled services. They are half of BAP's working committee and several key resources.

BAP is not "officially" affiliated with a particular Buddhist community. Consequently, as a grass roots, inter-sangha project, BAP not only provides a valuable information link among diverse Buddhist communities throughout the Bay Area and US, but also Buddhist information and referral services to any person living with HIV/AIDS. To date, most of BAP's services have centered in the Bay Area. The project regularly informs BAP participants of local and pertinent Dharma events. BAP has also responded to inquiries from New York, Arkansas, Oregon, and New Mexico.

In 1995, BAP looks forward to a steady increase in services here and across the country. The project will be publishing two resources: a compilation of excellent articles on integrating Buddhist practice and living with HIV and an information manual on Buddhist funeral rites from Theravada, Zen, and Vajrayana resources. With the development and distribution of audio and video materials and participation on Internet, BAP will network further with AIDS services and Buddhist communities in the Bay Area and nationwide.

Coming Up - BAP will be supporting two conferences/retreats on Buddhism and AIDS, organized by other agencies and scheduled for New York and California this year. BAP highly recommends the book, In The Lap Of The Buddha, a 1994 Shambhala publication describing author Gavin Harrison's courageous integration of Buddhist practice with HIV/Gay/sexual abuse issues. Gavin is graciously offering an In The Lap/BAP benefit scheduled for April 8, in San Francisco. Other suggested services for this year are the beginning of an ongoing medita-

What GBF Means To Me

by David Holmes

[The following article is another in an ongoing series. We encourage others to share their perspectives about GBF - GBF Newsletter Committee]

*To study the Way is to study the self.
To study the self is to forget the self.
To forget the self is to be awakened by all things. ----- Dogen*

The Gay Buddhist Fellowship is a great blessing in my life. Whether sitting within the quiet, sacred space of this group on a Sunday morning or engaging your clear, bright minds in dharma-dialogue, I feel I am learning from you how to fully embody the gay soul I have been given in this incarnation.

It seems that we are all just beginning to discover that there is something unique in our experience of this life that can be used by each one of us to catch a glimpse of what lies beyond the veil of consensual reality. This gay spirit is whole, complete, ancient and abiding in the human race. That it persists in the genes of all the families of all the races of the world is, to me, eloquent testimony to the vital role it has played in the development of our species. I wouldn't be at all surprised if the evolutionary strategy of sprinkling the population with a few gay men and women turns out to have been as central to human evolution as the development of the opposable thumb. (With our corpus callosum 13% larger and our anterior commissure 34% larger than those of our heterosexual brethren, it's no wonder I enjoy hanging out with you guys!)

I'm not advocating the cultivation of "gay pride"—any more than I would advocate cultivating pride in one's gender, race or nationality. But we must learn who we are. To paraphrase Dogen—before we can be awakened by all things, before we can forget the self, we must study the self, by observing what arises in the mind, moment by moment. As gay people in this society, we've all been sold such a bill of goods—we've been taught to despise the very thing we should most cherish. What so often arises in our minds is the distorted view of ourselves which we have absorbed from straight culture. To fully transcend this gay body/mind, we must first see it for exactly what it is. As I spend more time in fellowship with you, as I gradually pull away the layers of internalized homophobia and confront the fear of knowing who I really am, I am learning that there is a fully functional being within me who is gay and absolutely in line with his true nature. He gives me wise counsel: to awaken to all things, I must fully become who I am.

I wish to express my gratitude to each of you and to our practice. As Dogen quotes an ancient sage in the Shobogenzo:

Familiarity with good people is like walking through mist and dew; although they do not drench your garment, in time it becomes imbued with moisture.

EXPLORING GAY PRACTICE... ...EXPLORING OUR LIVES

One of the most basic questions you can ask of a Buddhist is about "practice". What is your practice? Do you practice with others? How does practice affect your life? The word practice implies something you do and a path you follow. It is often described as a spiritual path, a way to realize your own nature and find enlightenment. For a Buddhist, it is frequently a meditation practice, but others have described theirs' in terms of social service, earth service, writing, the arts etc.

On Saturday February 18th in a one day workshop, the Gay Buddhist Fellowship will explore and focus on who we are, how we as gay men practice and what that means for the GBF. The day will be an opportunity to look at "gay practice" as a direct expression of our true nature. It will be conducted in a Beginners Mind spirit reflecting the innocence of a first inquiry. For many of us, it has been an individual dilemma as well as a sangha (group) dilemma to describe why we come together as Gay Buddhists.

Dozen-zenji, the renounced Japanese Zen teacher said, "To study Buddhism is to study ourselves. To study ourselves is to forget ourselves." The day will begin with sharing our stories (Buddha nature), continue into looking at how we practice (the Dharma), and conclude with our experience within GBF (Sangha). Buddhist teachers have emphasized bringing the practice from the meditation hall into our daily lives. If we do that as gay men and as Buddhists, we can begin to understand what gay practice means. We invite you to consider joining us for this exploration of each other as well as practice.

This workshop will be held at Sangha House located at 1800 Arch Street in Berkeley one block from the UC campus. You must pre-register if you plan to attend. Cost will be $10.00 to cover lunch and help pay for the use of this Buddhist center. Enrollment is limited to 35 people and we at present have 15 people registered. Pick up a registration form at the first meeting in February. You can register by sending a check to GBF for $10.00 and we will send you the registration form by mail.

Building Sangha is a focus in this workshop and it is always appropriate to reconnect with what the Buddha taught. Buddha's comment on Sangha is taken from the book "White Clouds, Clear Path" by Thich Nhat Hanh. As noted in the monthly schedule, this subject will be the discussion topic at our first meeting in February and a full report of what was discussed will be available after the workshop.

SANGHA

"The very nature of a sangha is harmony. I believe harmony can be realized by following these principles:

1. Sharing a common space such as a forest or home.
2. Sharing the essentials of daily life together.
3. Observing the precepts together.
4. Using only words that contribute to harmony, avoiding all words that can cause the community to break.
5. Sharing insights and understanding together.
6. Respecting others' viewpoints and not forcing another to follow your own viewpoint. "
