GBF Sponsors Foundations of Buddhism Study Group

David Holmes

GBF's Foundations of Buddhism Study Group met last Thursday, May 18th, for the first of seven weekly meetings. The series was organized by David Sunseri and Alan Oliver, who are also serving as facilitators. The group is composed of fifteen men, some of whom are new to Buddhism, others new to GBF—as well as a few seasoned practitioners. The meeting was held in Alan Oliver's home.

The topic of the first meeting was the Buddha's life and background. We began the evening by introducing ourselves and talking a little bit about our practice and interest in attending the study group. David and Alan then gave a brief introduction to the life of the historical Buddha, pointing out that much of what is recorded of his life may have been embellished and expanded during the first centuries after his death, when the canon was transmitted orally, and that although these records may or may not represent literal truth, they nonetheless have great value to us as a story of the awakening of a human being and the realization of his true nature.

Some stories were cited which underscored the human qualities which the Buddha possessed. In the discussion that followed, it seemed to be the opinion of most present that it was this very "humanness" that makes the story of the life of the Buddha at the same time so accessible and so inspiring to us in our own struggle for liberation and realization.

The group seemed to gel right away, and a lively and thoughtful evening of conversation and sharing ensued. I am looking forward to the next six weeks. Look for updates written by other participants in the next editions of the GBF newsletter.

GBF Summer Retreat July 14-16, 1995

The fourth annual Gay Buddhist Fellowship Summer Retreat will take place the weekend of July 14-16, 1995 at Vajrapani Institute near Boulder Creek in the beautiful red-woods of the Santa Cruz mountains.

This silent time of meditation and mindfulness will be an opportunity for us to practice together, deepen our relationships and support our Sangha. The moderate schedule, combining elements of Theravadan, Zen and Tibetan traditions, will include sitting and walking meditation, Dharma talks and readings. We will open the retreat on Friday night, July 14, with a general orientation followed by a period of meditation. We'll practice together all day Saturday, gathering around the stupa in the evening for a memorial service for our partners, family and friends who have died. We will continue our practice or Sunday until 4 pm in the afternoon.

We held our summer retreat at this location two years ago, and it was a wonderful experience for all who attended. The director and residents at Vajrapani are very happy about our return this year, and have warmly welcomed us back.

Registration fees for this weekend retreat will be $80-$100, sliding scale, which includes housing and vegetarian meals. Housing will be in large dormitory cabins and camping areas, although a small number of semi-private cabins (two per cabin) are also available at additional cost

Registration forms for this retreat will be mailed out the first part of June. We hope many GBF members will be able to attend this annual summer event.

A GBF Day of Mindfulness and Meditation at Sangha House

Yesterday, Saturday the twentieth of May, fifteen men from GBF spent a day together in silent meditation at Sangha House in Berkeley. We arrived before nine o'clock to settle in and get acquainted. For some it was the first time ever at an all-day sitting; the old hands among us knew more or less what they were getting into.

The day was organized by David Sunseri, who had been among those who originally contacted the owner of Sangha House for our February workshop on GBF and Gay Buddhism. Having been greeted by her with such warmth and enthusiasm, we all agreed with David that this location would be ideal for a small group day of meditation.

Sangha House was until last year the site of the Empty Gate Korean Zen center, and therefore is well equipped with zafus and zabutons. There is a beautiful meditation hall and altar—subdued, but with plenty of light and fresh air. It has the grounded feel of a practice center, a place where the many hours, days, years of meditation have left their traces.

After a brief orientation to the day's schedule (alternating 40 minutes of sitting meditation with 20 minutes of walking meditation, punctuated by short Dharma readings, and breaks for lunch and afternoon tea), we settled onto our cushions for our day of mindfulness—a day to share silently our effort and concentration. I am sure that for each of us the experience of the day was quite different. We each must have had our own cyclical rhythms of single-pointedness and scattering of thought. For some, the physical pain of sitting may have been the foremost reality; for others, the chattering of the monkey-mind might have been the chief obstacle. For all I know, some among us may have been floating in clouds of bliss. But we all sat and walked and sat and walked, and ate and sat and walked some more. In the end we each must have felt some subtle shifts in consciousness, some deepening of our practice.

At five o'clock we dedicated the merit of the day and hugged and smiled and said our goodbyes and packed up and left for our "real lives" on the outside. It was a long day, but it was way too short. During the last sitting I felt that I had finally found my stride, and as the final bell sounded I heard myself saying, "Please, just one more!"

I thank all of the men who came to Sangha House yesterday and helped me sustain and deepen my practice in this way. I also wish to thank David Sunseri for his dedication to GBF and his effort in organizing this event.
